How cancer insurance works

Cancer insurance provides a lump sum payment for certain procedures, screenings, and treatments. The benefit is paid directly to employees regardless of their medical insurance and can help relieve their financial burden during a time of stress. The benefit can be used for any purpose, such as:

- copays, deductibles, or coinsurance for cancer procedures and treatments;
- experimental treatments not covered by health insurance;
- transportation to a specialized care facility or lodging;
- everyday expenses, like rent, mortgage, groceries, or other bills.

Smart way to manage growing costs

Just as cancer diagnoses are increasing, so are the costs to treat them; cancer costs have been rising about 5 percent every year.³ By offering cancer insurance, you can allow employees to find the resources they need to make recovery their priority, all while offering a comprehensive benefits package.

The current out-of-pocket bill for a cancer payment is $1,266 a month.²
