This week's health care reform news:

Most Americans feel drug costs are unreasonable

A new Kaiser Family Foundation Health Tracking Poll found that most Americans, across political affiliations, feel that drug costs are unreasonable (72 percent).

Other highlights include:

- Alaska legislators are suing Gov. Bill Walker over his tactics for expanding Medicaid eligibility.
- A Nebraska legislator plans to introduce a “direct primary care” bill.
- New York’s governor vetoed legislation that would have given doctors final say in prescription disputes with Medicaid managed care plans.
